It is not as pricy as the Roadster (MSRP $71,000 and up), but it offers a lot more premium features. It's sitting in the $70,000 range now. I highly recommend it for a family or a wide variety of people who are on a budget. The Roadster is fast and looks cool. But the Model S is a rocket ship. TMC has a full review of the Model S. I highly recommend reading the review, but here's a picture of the car. The standard car comes with 60 kWh battery which gives it a range of 230 miles. I think the majority of people would be happy with that range. It still has decent speed. I've been driving one in the DC for several days and I'm just a little bit faster than some of the other cars on the road. As far as safety goes, the car is perfectly designed. I've driven cars with 200 pound people who have been hit by other cars. I drive an M35, so I've had some nasty crashes. I'm not a good driver and this car handles with ease. I've hit the back of a bus going 80 miles an hour and the car survived. It didn't move much and it was okay. The front lip is recessed when you hit the back, so any damage is limited. There are also options to add a second battery. I plan on buying a battery and using the second battery for a small project. The car is not ugly either. It's just a study in grey. The Model S is a luxury car, not a sporty car. It is nothing but a straight f678ea9f9e
